Celebrating Community
What is community, why should Christian educators be concerned about it, and why are we celebrating community at Kentucky Christian University?

No one should be more interested in creating a sense of community than the people on a Christian college or university campus. The importance of community is clearly addressed in the Bible and demonstrated in the life of the early church. When first established, the church was an “intentional community” where people shared common beliefs and characteristics. Acts 2:41-47 describes a community of faith united by solidarity of purpose, mutuality of respect for differences, trust, hospitality and humility. In contrast, First Corinthians 11-13 issues sober warnings about the breakdown of community which occurs when these virtues are no longer celebrated, or perhaps even worse, sacrificed on the altar of arrogance and selfish ambition.

There is strong historical evidence that the early church celebrated community continuously, especially every first day of the week as believers shared together in the Lord’s Supper - a communal meal observed in remembrance of the sacrificial death of Christ on the cross, and celebrated because of the resurrection of Christ from the grave.

In its strongest form ‘communion’ or ‘community’ involves a profound meeting or encounter – not just with other people, but also with God. Creating a strong sense of community among Christians presumes a spiritual union between each Christian and Christ and hence between every Christian.

The community that is Kentucky Christian University is best understood as a “community of faith and meaning.” In other words, the University as “community” plays a crucial role in fostering a sense of belonging and purpose. There is no greater relationship than to belong to God. There is no greater call than to serve the purposes of God. This is the meaning of life and the bedrock upon which we are building a community of faith at Kentucky Christian University.

KCU is different – very different. The idea of a university community that is intentionally and purposefully Christian implies that the members of the community have something in common with each other and the thing held in common distinguishes them in a significant way from the members of other higher education entities. To be “in community” at KCU is to embrace and celebrate our mutual faith and commitment to serve the purposes of God. We believe that faith and scholarship can and must be interwoven and we believe that as a Christian higher education community we have something important to contribute to the world’s understanding of the meaning and purpose of life.

The fact that people live close to one another does not necessarily mean that they have much to do with each other. There may be little interaction between neighbors. Even on a Christian college or university campus where faculty, staff and students share many common convictions, there is a tendency to take relationships for granted. Building community takes work and a willingness to participate in community life beyond the obligatory classroom relationship or committee assignment. In reality, it is the nature of the relationships between people that most clearly define the significant and transformational aspects of ‘community’.

When students and faculty are asked about what “community” means to them, it is relationships that are most commonly cited. For most of us, our deepest sense of belonging is linked to our most intimate relationships, especially family and friends. Such informal relationships also enable us to navigate our way around the demands and challenges of everyday living. Simply put, we need one another.

It is in the spirit of such conviction that we strongly encourage administrators, faculty and staff to engage students outside the classroom and to share as a community of faith in the University’s twice weekly chapel services. Fellowship and corporate worship are critical components to building Christian community. Informal, but purposeful fellowship is huge. It is during these times of unstructured engagement that we expose our hearts and passions most powerfully. It is during these times that students see beyond the exterior of our lives and catch a glimpse of how the purposes of God have taken hold of our hearts.
Truth be told, the co-curriculum is far more transformational than the curriculum because it is personal and intensely interactive. It is from the co-curriculum (e.g. informal fellowship, corporate worship, a small group Bible study, a service-learning experience, a joint student/faculty research project, a mentoring relationship, small-talk over coffee at McDonalds, a faculty led travel/study experience in Kenya) that the “spirit of community” or “sense of community” is achieved.

The real pay-off of community is accomplished when we aspire to connect with students and successfully transcend beyond the strict academic regiments and requirements of reports, papers and exams. This is not to devalue the importance of rigorous study in the academic disciplines. To the contrary, students must be equipped with the knowledge to function effectively within the disciplines and to continue to learn as a lifelong skill, but when academic life is integrated with the purposes of God in the context of Christian community, it energizes and transcends any educational experience available at secular universities, community colleges, and many church affiliated institutions.

We are celebrating community at Kentucky Christian University because we believe that there is an important and unique dynamic at work when a campus community is intentionally and decidedly Christian. Are all of our students Christians and are all models of Christian conduct? Of course not, but is there a better place for an unbelieving student to live and study than in a Christian community where the word of God can be seen and heard? We should not be surprised by reports of late night baptisms in increasing numbers or by rededications to Christ. These are the natural consequences of living in a community where Christ is preeminent in the lives of students, faculty and staff.

I am proud to be the President of a university where frequent announcements of students coming to Christ receive rousing standing ovations during chapel. Why does this excite me? It is an indicator that our students are discovering the meaning of life, the purposes of God, and the importance of living in community as it relates to Christ and His church.

Consider this question. Can we educate for community without being in community? Let me state the question another way. Can we educate students for Christian leadership and service in the church and in professions throughout the world without educating them in an authentic and intentionally relational faith-based community where Christian leaders think globally? The obvious answer is “absolutely not!” By focusing on the importance of living in community, we are encouraging our students to assume crucial roles in the leadership of the church and to boldly exercise their faith in the marketplace, the workplace and the town square.

We celebrate the kind of higher education that is carried out in the context of a dynamic Christian community where faculty, staff, and students learn together, cultivate their faith together, and carry out the virtues of humility, hospitality and trust together, and where there is solidarity of purpose and a seeking after the heart of God. Kentucky Christian University is uniquely positioned to carry out this purpose and in partnership with the church can address the perplexing issues that prevent much of the world from hearing the gospel.

The church and the University working together in community can solve the problem of functional illiteracy that makes it impossible for over half of the world’s population to read and come to the knowledge of the truth. Together we can solve the problems of poverty, disease, moral corruption, and biblical and spiritual ignorance. It is a great irony, but the very problems that beg for a solution are themselves the forums by which the message of Christ can be most clearly seen and heard.

If you are seeking the answers to questions such as: Why am I here? What is the meaning of life? What is my purpose? You can find the answers in the community of faith known as Kentucky Christian University.

In this issue of The Voice you will hear from the deans of KCU’s seven schools. In their own words they will describe how they are building community to enhance student faith, student learning and student success. They will show you their heart and you will discover their passion for pursuing the purposes of God.
The School of Arts and Sciences anchors every major at KCU. In addition to offering the required general education core, and support courses for the curricula in majors from nursing to education, Arts and Sciences offers degree programs in history and the humanities. The School is multidisciplinary, which means that its faculty is trained in a variety of academic areas, including history, literature, the sciences, mathematics, communication, political science, modern languages, art, and the humanities. Our faculty members teach classes as varied as astronomy, archaeology, algebra, and anatomy, but our goal is the same: the training of well-informed, compassionate, committed disciples of Jesus Christ.

We think of our disciplines as different lenses through which we and our students can better see Biblical Truth and grasp the life of faith. When I read Shakespeare’s The Tempest, for example, I consider again the kind of forgiveness to which Jesus calls us. Dr. Starr reads Moby Dick and shares with his students its connection to the wisdom of Ecclesiastes. The structure of the atom and the structure of our solar system offer fascinating parallels which inform Dr. Haynie’s teaching of the principles governing God’s creation. Dr. Wineland’s students learn how the honors heaped on a Roman general in his official “triumph” ceremony illuminate Colossians 2:15.

Although we represent a single school within the University, our teachers are involved with students across the KCU community in athletics, drama, film production, field trips, including overseas study trips, and Arts and Sciences–sponsored performances and exhibitions. In addition, Arts and Science faculty members are involved in the communities that surround the KCU campus, from teaching and teaching in local churches to volunteering in local schools and area prisons. The wide variety of training, experience, and interests represented means that students completing the required arts and science core are exposed to living examples of the integration of traditional academics and the service-oriented life of faith.

This integration of faith, training, and service can be seen clearly in Arts and Sciences projects like the annual spring play. In Spring 2005, for example, faculty and student performers worked together to produce The Lion, the Witch, and the Wardrobe, which not only played on campus to more than 1,000 people, but also traveled to a medium-security men’s prison, the first dramatic performance every staged at Eastern Kentucky Correctional Center, the second-largest prison in Kentucky. Another example of the integration of faith, academic interest, and service is the annual project of students in the course “Film and American Culture,” who create a highly-professional promotional video for an emerging Christian artist or group. In these and other projects, Arts and Science teachers and students use their passion for an academic area and their faith, in service to others.

Arts and Science graduates in history have gone on to studies in law, government, and public policy at major universities including the University of Kentucky, Kent State University, Regent University, and Western Carolina University. Humanities majors at Kentucky Christian University have completed six-month, faith-based internships in film (the Los Angeles Center for Film Studies), contemporary music (Martha’s Vineyard), Central American Studies (Costa Rica), photography (Australian Studies Center), and government policy (American Studies Program, Washington, DC).

Arts and Sciences is proud to prepare students who earn places in these highly competitive programs and represent Kentucky Christian and the Kingdom so credibly.

by K. Fawn Knight, Ph.D., Dean
Since we come from seven states (Montana to Michigan) and one foreign country (Malaysia), you might think that building community among the faculty of the Sack School of Bible and Ministry would be a difficult task. But our community does not depend on uni-culturalism or geographical identity. It is based on our common faith, our common passion, and our common goal. First, all of us are believers in the Lordship of Jesus Christ. Second, we share a love for teaching. Third, we are committed to the greater glory of God through the ministry of the gospel. Therefore, we have a bond that is greater than national origin or geographical region.

To build a sense of community you have to care about your brother’s and sister’s journey. To have a genuine bond of fellowship you have to feel each other’s hurts and celebrate each other’s victories. That is why we scheduled a spiritual retreat last August for the faculty of the Sack School. We loaded into a van and drove into the country to the Carter Christian Church where we could spend the afternoon together lounging in the church’s spacious educational wing away from distractions and telephones. During this time, one of the important things we did was to hear one another’s “story”. We took this opportunity to learn about the spiritual experiences that define who we are as persons of faith.

We also try to carry our sense of sharing into our relationships with students. We hope to exhibit not only a caring attitude in the classroom but also to create situations in smaller groups that allow for more personal attention. We know that we can not get to know well as many students majoring in ministry as we would like (there are around 100 of them!) but we still desire as much as possible that they have a sense of community with us.

Thus, many of us host discipleship groups of around five students. Dr. Jim Girdwood often makes special trips to hear students preach. Professor Wendy West offers housing to international students in her home. Professor Rick Chromey takes students on mission trips. Dr. Rob Ford offers a free marriage seminar to any interested student. One can often find Professor Ronnie Sisk guiding a gang of hikers through the wilderness.

The H.O.M.E. church (House of Mission and Evangelism) is fortunate to have Dr. Randall Tan as its leader. Dr. Perry Stepp is a popular mentor to student ministers. Dr. Dennis Durst meets informally with a small group of students to discuss current theological issues.

The closest term in the New Testament for community is the Greek word koinonia, often translated fellowship, sharing or participation. In the first epistle of John, this term is especially interesting. John wants to teach his readers the true doctrines of faith. If he does that and if the students listen, they will have fellowship with him (1 John 1:3). Our prayer is that through our teaching, our example, and our mentoring, our students may come to share with us our faith, our passion, and our life’s goal.
The Census Bureau recently announced that the United States has reached two new milestones. There are now more than 300 million people living within our borders. But for the first time in recorded history, a majority of American households do not contain a married couple. Over 50% of American households are now comprised of singles, single parent families or adults living together outside the bond of marriage.

These numbers suggest a breakdown in the kind of meaningful relationships that build strong families and communities. The KCU School of Business is unique in its focus on building community through Christ honoring business models and relationships.

Rick and Tonya McDavid realized a life-long dream several years ago when they were able to purchase Heavenly Treasures Christian book store. They have invested significant time and energy into making their store a place where people of faith feel welcome and even cared for. It is not unusual for customers to find themselves being prayed for by Tonya or a store employee. From a market perspective, though, many people in our area who purchase Christian books, music and gifts are unaware that the store exists. Like many small business owners, the day-to-day demands on their time leave precious few hours that can be devoted to long-term planning.

That is where KCU business students come in. Rick and Tonya have graciously allowed students in the Advertising and Promotion class to assist them in developing a marketing strategy. KCU business students benefit from the experience of actually applying material learned in the classroom to a real-world setting. The McDavid’s benefit from the increased number of people who think about Heavenly Treasures when they are in the market for a new book, Bible or CD.

Projects that connect business students with business owners in the local community also result in stronger ties between Kentucky Christian University and the local community as well as deeper relationships between the students themselves. Working together to solve real problems tends not only to solve problems, but also draws people together in the process.

The School of Business at KCU exists to equip men and women of character to be ambassadors of Christ in the communities in which they work and live, men and women empowered with wisdom and driven by pure motivations to make business decisions that will go beyond the bottom line, and men and women who will intentionally pursue relationships with workplace peers that extend beyond work-related issues.

These relationships will provide KCU business students with opportunities to share Christ – the only thing that is certain – in workplaces that constantly deal with uncertainty.

Providing opportunities that will enable students to experience what it means to be connected and unified as a community while in school will better prepare them to intentionally reach out to build relationships with others in the future.
I am blessed! Most people do not have the privilege of getting to do what they dreamed of doing as a child. As an eighth grader, I knew God was calling me to teach. I just began my thirtieth year of teaching and I love teaching more today than as I did 30 years ago!

To be a teacher is one of the greatest callings for a Christian. In the early 1900s, a Christian educator named J.W. Lusby valued the profession of teaching so much that he opened a teacher training institute in the mountains of eastern Kentucky known as Christian Normal Institute. For nearly 20 years, CNI provided quality Christian teachers for public schools throughout the region. In 1944, CNI became Kentucky Christian College and teacher training was discontinued for almost 40 years. In the late 1970s, KCC once again recognized the importance of providing Christian teachers for America’s schools. In 1982, KCC’s teacher education program was accredited by the state of Kentucky. Kentucky Christian has graduated 535 teachers who have taught in 23 states and six foreign countries. Our program offerings have grown from the original elementary program and now includes middle school programs in English, Science, Social Studies and Math, a K-12 music program and secondary school programs in Social Studies and English.

I am blessed to witness God’s call to teaching in the lives of the Keeran School of Education faculty, students, and graduates on a daily basis. Our faculty are committed to providing our students not only quality teacher preparation programs but also the emotional and spiritual support they need to develop the character, compassion, and competence they will need to be salt and light in their future classrooms, schools and communities. KSE faculty sponsor the teacher education organization, Pi Chi Delta, have discipleship groups that include teacher education students, accompany teacher education students on field trips and service projects both locally and outside the region. This commitment does not end when our students complete their programs. Our faculty provide professional and personal support to our graduates. Whether through an e-mail, a phone call, an on-campus visit or a visit to their schools to provide a workshop, a listening ear, or a shoulder to cry on, our graduates know that relationships built during their years in our program are still alive and well!

We want the teachers we send out from KCU to know how their knowledge of God’s word and their faith in Jesus Christ can empower them to teach the content required by their school systems and to reach into the lives and hearts of their students in a way that only a Christian teacher can. If you are a high school student who dreams of being a teacher empowered like this, I invite you to make a visit to KCU’s Keeran School of Education to both see and experience an accredited teacher preparation program that not only values but celebrates the potential impact teachers can have on the hearts and minds of children and adolescents. We look forward to meeting you and sharing our passion for teaching with you.
Building a Community of Musicians Who Love and Serve

Community seems to come quite naturally for the KCU School of Music since we are together much of the time throughout any given day. One of the elements of community is spending time together in informal settings – one that we call “Music Family Moments.” These take place on specified Fridays in the middle of the afternoon. Usually there is food involved but the purpose of the gathering is to strengthen our students in their understanding of who and whose they are and to encourage them to become the person and musician God has called them to be.

Many of our classes build community because we are working as a whole for a single purpose. The ensembles - Concert Choir, Chorale, Concert Band, the Jazz Ensemble, Ars Nova, and Destiny - put students together for the purpose of creating music, but ultimately, ministry, fellowship, sharing, praying together and loving one another is the real product of the ensemble...we just happen to also make great music.

The tours of the Concert Choir, Chorale and Jazz Ensemble, the trips to perform in Carnegie Hall and Cuba, the numerous concerts in various venues offer multiple times of interaction on the personal level. Many hours in the bus, staying in guest homes, eating in restaurants, and visiting sights along the way not only provide community at the moment but they also build memories that keep community alive long after the students have graduated and gone their separate ways.

There are also those community building times in which students visit in the homes of the professors. Destiny will visit in the home of Dr. and Mrs. Brunelle where the main fare for the evening is white chili - a southern favorite. Other students will visit in my home where we may watch a movie on the life of Mozart or, during the preparation of the Feast of Christmas, watch “White Christmas.” These informal times are valuable and precious because there is no agenda, no assignment, no structured discussion - only the fellowship of those who enjoy being together because we love one another.

Often I receive e-mails or phone calls from graduates. Even though we spent hundreds of hours in the classroom during their tenure as a student, the topic of these conversations always goes to those things which built community and family. The memory of those occasions is so indelibly placed in our minds that they become instantly renewed as if they just happened yesterday. What a joy it is to relive those moments which strengthen the bonds of family and community even though we are hundreds of miles apart.

What we do on and off the campus of KCU is vitally important. Our students grasp quickly the need and the importance of building community. It is the building block for the community they will begin in their first ministry or first classroom experience.

It is one thing to build a school of music of good musicians. It is quite another to build a community of musicians who love and serve one another because we share a common unity in Christ. ἐὰν

The Voice
In the KCU School of Nursing the tapestry of community is woven in the classroom, clinical settings, Bible studies, service-learning activities, mentoring relationships, mission trips, and prayer groups. The KCU School of Nursing is different from other schools of nursing because we emphasize Jesus as the perfect model of servant-leadership, caring, and compassion. KCU Nursing integrates faith and scholarship to prepare nurses to meet future challenges. We embrace a commitment to advance God’s kingdom through the relationships we forge with one another and our clients.

Nursing is a rigorous academic discipline equipping future nurses to practice competently within complex healthcare settings. As our students gain knowledge and skills here on campus, the real challenge is to translate this information into clinical practice. In fact our students are required to complete over 1,000 clock hours of clinical practice before they graduate. Also, graduates must pass the standardized national board of nursing examination to be issued a license to practice. The KCU School of Nursing helps students to achieve success not only in coursework and clinicals but also on the board examination.

This fall, the School of Nursing admitted the 5th class of sophomore students. Following is a statement made by one of these students.

Jesus’ words in Matthew 28:18-20 speak no more powerfully than when thought of in terms of the nursing profession. A nurse tends to the human spirit by tending to the human body. Nursing is a chance to reach out spiritually to those who are hurting inside and outside. I can think of no better expression of Christian love than becoming a nurse. I pray that I can help heal bodies and make disciples of all nations. Nursing is an opportunity to serve under “the Great Physician” by healing, loving, and meeting people where they are. –J. Christopher Campbell

We are building community within the School of Nursing to enhance student faith, learning, and success. Students choose to become a part of this community because their goal is to be the best nurses they can be while learning to honor Christ through serving and caring for the physical and spiritual needs of others.
In order to develop community, we must look at the obstacles to building and maintaining that community. This struck me in a most unique way recently as I was riding my exercise bicycle while grading students’ video assignments, all the while praying about (ok, more like self-criticizing my attempts at) writing this article on community, and intermittently scanning my most recent copy of “Women’s Health”.

Suddenly, I stopped my multi-tasking and gave my full attention to an article about “mindfulness”. The article defined mindfulness as “paying attention to what’s happening right now without brooding over the past, fretting about the future, or making judgments about how you’d prefer the moment to unfold. When you’re mindful, you’re awake, alert, fully alive.”

Often our sense of community is lacking because as individuals we are robbed of our ability to be present in the moment because we are too busy evaluating the past and planning for the future. We cannot “attend” to one another.

In the School of Social Work and Human Services, students learn about dealing with matters of the heart and mind, but faculty must also continually learn to “be” present in the present, not only physically, but mentally, emotionally, and most importantly spiritually as well. As we “commune” with God, He shows us His plans (Jeremiah 29:11-13), and only then are we able to “commune” with one another in “unity” toward a common God given goal which creates community.

Whether one is a faculty member, staff person, or student, every person in the School of Social Work and Human Services (Social Work and Counseling Psychology programs) has a common “calling”. Our call is to “speak up for those who cannot speak for themselves, for the rights of all who are destitute. Speak up and judge fairly; defend the rights of the poor and needy.” Proverbs 31:8-9

One of the most precious examples of community at KCU is the freedom to start our classes with prayer, openly sharing praises and petitions between students and faculty. It is a great privilege for any one of us to take a moment with a student and pray with her/him about more private matters.

In the Social Work and Counseling Psychology Winter Coat Drive it is observed through the social work student group (Laos Protos) fund raising to purchase items for gift bags for Hope’s Place (a victim’s advocacy agency) to give to women at local hospitals who have just undergone a rape exam.

It is also evident by the Counseling Psychology students’ goal of collecting 650 winter coats to distribute to needy and homeless people in the Tri-State Community this winter.

It is also evidenced by one of our Social Work classes facilitating a day in November for the campus and larger community to develop a deeper understanding and appreciation of the Cherokee culture.

Our school’s partnership with ‘Into Abba’s Arms’ an orphanage in Kenya, Africa is also evidence of that “call”. Although there are many demonstrations of community building, these are significant not because of the “doing”, but because of the power of “being present” with those people who God has placed in our lives.

KCU: Partnering With Churches to Advance The Lord’s Kingdom Through Estate Planning Stewardship

KCU’s approach to estate planning stewardship is centered on an estate planning tool known as a Living Trust. A Living Trust is completely private and confidential. Assets placed in a Living Trust are not subject to the expenses of probate. You may serve as the trustee of your Living Trust and it is revocable at any time prior to your death.

KCU’s Tom Burbrink, who has decades of personal finance experience, is available to come to your church and share a free 60-minute seminar that explains the benefits of a Living Trust for the members of your congregation. To discuss how our free Living Trust Seminar can benefit your congregation contact Tom Burbrink by telephone at (859) 585-3512 or by e-mail at estateplanning@kcu.edu.

Creating Communities Across Cultures: Team Expansion is Charting New Territories

If you’re searching for an organization with a passion for community, you don’t really have to travel all that far. Just motor on over to Louisville, Kentucky, where you’ll find the ‘home office’ of Team Expansion, a missionary-sending organization founded in 1978 by KCU grads, Doug and Penny Lucas.

From the moment one enters the door of the rehabbed 150-year-old church building that serves as Team Expansion’s International Services Center, one immediately takes note of the unique flavor and style of this fast-paced workplace. From humble beginnings in a dorm-room prayer meeting at Kentucky Christian University, the organization has rapidly grown to become the largest missionary-sending agency in the Christian Churches, with nearly 300 full-time workers stationed among 70 different unreached people groups or projects in over 40 foreign lands.

In addition, the group regularly fields another 50 individuals each summer in its PATHWAYS Internship program. And through their recent alliance with Crossroads Missions, they co-op to send out literally thousands of short-termers on one-week work trips to destinations such as New Orleans and Mexico. Since the year 2000, the two organizations have worked under one roof as if they’re part of the same body. This alliance is, in and of itself, a metaphor for the flexible yet focused community that is Team Expansion.

“The truth is, we know that none of us could accomplish it all single-handedly,” explains Doug Lucas, who serves as President of the organization. “Take the team in Venezuela, for instance.” Lucas points to a giant world map plastered with pictures. “I’m not joking; everybody we send down there wants to go back to Caracas full-time. There must be something in the water,” Lucas jokes.

His stories indeed make it sound like a fun place to work. “Tara Woolard (also a KCU grad) has arguably been one of the best single female workers in the last decade anywhere in the world.” Lucas goes on to describe Dave Linn, who graduated from KCU’s Master of Ministry program prior to starting his work as a co-team leader in Caracas. “This guy would be the first to tell you that language was a struggle for him. And yet now, his near-native fluency serves as a great conduit for his incredible knowledge of the Word. Everything he touches turns to gold.”

With God’s help, Team Expansion launched the first Christian Church outreach in Venezuela in 1986. Now, over one thousand new believers gather in Christian Churches there each week to worship Christ as Lord. They’ve recently sent one family to join a Team Expansion ministry in North Africa working among Muslims, in a place too sensitive to name. They’ve sent another worker to the unreached Warao people, who live on the Oronoco River delta. By 2010, the missionaries themselves will start disengaging, leaving the entire ministry in the hands of trained nationals.

The work in Ukraine has yielded similar results. Team Expansion began the work there while the USSR was still the USSR, in June 1991. They recruited Lifespring Christian Church (then Clovernook), Cincinnati, Ohio, to partner with them to launch the Kherson Christian Church later that year. Now, some 15 years later, the Kherson Christian Church is a megachurch with over 1000 in weekly worship attendance, and they’ve sent out their own missionaries to work with a nearby Muslim unreached people group where Team Expansion workers are translating scripture in a unique partnership with Pioneer Bible Translators.

Not far away, Team Expansion workers helped broker a deal with Kentucky Christian University to partner with a school for higher learning that is producing scores of Christians trained to serve in a variety of vocations in this newly independent land.
More recently, the Kherson Christian Church is sending Ukrainian missionaries to Bosnia to work with Team Expansion workers there as well. In fact, one convert traveled to Grayson to study at KCU. There she met and married another KCU student and the two have recently applied to join a team in Bosnia after having served in a youth ministry here in the USA for the last few years. Lucas observes, “God continues to amaze us with his sovereign will.”

To what does Team Expansion owe its fast-paced growth? Lucas cites several root causes. “At the end of the day, people like being a part of something successful. And through no fault of our own, only through the grace of God, Team Expansion people are doing some pretty cool things throughout the world.”

Team Expansion also believes in and practices proactive recruitment. Eric Derry, also a grad of KCU, is Vice President of Mobilization. “We try to get to know prospective recruits on a personal basis,” Eric explains. “We study their gifts and skills, then try to find a perfect fit for their unique traits.” Using this approach, God has raised up scores of new workers for the ministry at a time when many organizations are seeing their numbers decline.

Lucas has listed several additional possible explanations for the growth:

• The leaders seek to make sure each team understands its mission. They try to clearly describe the vision and the task.
• They establish clean lines of leadership by spelling out job descriptions.
• They invest heavily in training.
• The new Training Department at Team Expansion provides ongoing mentoring for life. It’s headed by Dr. Glen Gibson, Ph.D., whose missions degree from Fuller Seminary would qualify him to teach in any seminary in the world. The new five-person missionary training department is, Lucas believes, second to none on the planet in any other organization anywhere.
• The organization is big on grace. One of their seven “non-negotiables” reads, ‘Be a light not a judge; be a model not a critic.’ They believe in granting grace, while at the same time demanding excellence.
• They also work hard to make teamwork fun. They believe in celebrating the small gains, laughing a lot, and cultivating enthusiasm for the Cause.

What’s in the future for Team Expansion? Enough to make mere mortals tired just thinking about it. “More of the same . . . plus . . . we’d like to build a missionary training and retreat center so that both missionaries and local church members can come together to pray, retreat and learn more about God’s great global redemption adventure,” dreams Lucas. The group recently acquired – debt-free – 61 acres of beautiful woodlands on the outskirts of Louisville. “We’re calling it Emerald Hills and we’re dreaming of building mission teams into communities that can resolve any conflict and overcome the toughest problems. It’ll be a training ground as well as a refreshing place for reentry after one has served overseas.” If the past 28 years are any kind of indicator, the next couple of decades could be a pretty fun adventure in community.

President Keeran has announced the construction of a new facility on the University campus. The 24,000 square feet two-story building is the result of a partnership between Kentucky Christian University and King’s Daughters Medical Center in Ashland, Kentucky and will provide needed space for the KCU School of Nursing and expanded family health care for the region.

A formal groundbreaking ceremony was held on Thursday, September 21 for the $5 million two story facility that will be home to primary care physicians and expanded x-ray, CT, and MRI services, and a cardiology clinic. The ground floor will be occupied by the King’s Daughters Family Care Center and the second floor will be home to the KCU School of Nursing.

The project is the culmination of several months of planning between the two organizations and local community leaders. Construction of the facility is now underway with occupancy of the KDMC Family Health Care Center slated for May 2007.

Fred Jackson, CEO of King’s Daughters Medical Center, said the new center will bring much needed primary care and specialty services to Grayson. KDMC has already begun life-flight helicopter service with a landing pad on the KCU campus. President Keeran said, “The new facility is an exciting addition to our campus and represents a giant step forward in providing better health care for our entire community and the region.”

John Dundon, KCU’s Vice President for Strategic Operations called the new facility a boost to KDMC’s mission to deliver world-class health care and a significant advancement in KCU’s mission to provide quality Christian education for the next generation of health care professionals.
Building Community Through Collaboration

Boulevard, will be easily accessible to students, faculty and staff. The project also includes expanded parking for staff and guests visiting KCU’s administrative and admissions offices.

Dr. Gail Wise, Dean of the KCU School of Nursing has watched the nursing program grow from 17 students its first year in 2002 to over 55 students accepted into the program this year. As the program has grown, it has expanded beyond its original building to annex additional space in other existing facilities. Dr. Wise said, “This new facility will provide the space we need for offices, skill labs, classrooms, and student clinicals, and will provide an opportunity for the School of Nursing to offer CPR classes and other health services to the community.”

Building community through collaboration is possible when the partners share common values. Commenting on the importance of faith based partnerships, Dr. Keeran commented, “This is an impressive example of what is possible when people who are passionate about servant leadership work together for the good of others, especially others who cannot help themselves. Building community by serving the needs of others is at the heart of both organizations (KCU and KDMC) and when the focus is on service God will add His blessing and good things will happen.”

The KCU-KDMC collaboration is an important example of the way partnerships can build community. King’s Daughters Medical Center has worked with KCU to strengthen health care in our region for several years. The Medical Center was a key player in the establishment of the KCU School of Nursing, but the benefits to both organizations and to the region are only just beginning to be realized. Jill York, President of the Grayson Area Chamber of Commerce said, “This is one more attractive facet to our community.” When recruiting business and industry to the area, quality health care and quality higher education are very important considerations.

King’s Daughters Medical Center, City of Grayson, and KCU officials participate in the groundbreaking.
Kentucky Christian University has joined forces with Mission Connect to create a “hands-on” opportunity for our campus to engage the Islamic community. Recently The Voice interviewed Wendy West, KCU Professor of Intercultural Ministry, and Todd Keane, Director of Ministry to Muslims for Mission Connect to ask them about their efforts to create greater cultural awareness and communication between Christians and Muslims.

VOICE: Wendy, the effort to sharpen KCU’s mission focus seems to be attracting a lot of interest among students, tell us what led to this innovative approach?

Wendy: Last year our student mission organization, GMA (Global Mission Awareness), conducted a survey on campus to see how students were feeling about the campus’ involvement in mission. Many said they hardly knew what was going on but if they had the opportunity to get more involved they would. We realized that even with weekly updates and open meetings, what students were asking for were organized opportunities to go and get involved. Our opportunity to participate with Todd and Angela in Louisville spurred our ideas for a new approach.

VOICE: What are the goals of the new program? How are you hoping that this effort will impact students and their experience at KCU?

Wendy: Our main goal of the new program is to get students involved by going. By going they will see the need for reaching out, gain confidence that they can, and be motivated to continue when they graduate whether they stay in the United States or move abroad. Along with this we want to inform students about the needs of those supported as missionaries. By encouraging them to see various ways they can take part now, we hope to build a foundation they will carry on in their own lives and be an encouragement to the Church as they go out.

VOICE: Wendy, you spent a good bit of time in China and are passionate about global outreach. Why is it important for KCU students to interact with other cultures and think globally?

Wendy: When we interact with other cultures maybe we begin to see God at work in ways we didn’t think He could and in places we didn’t realize He was. At KCU, many students are laying the foundations of their faith more solidly than they ever have before. When they realize that mission impacts the Body of Christ around the world and not just their local congregation, they are more aware of their part in the Body and how to live out their faith. They become servants of Christ’s global Kingdom.

VOICE: You received a number of applications from mission organizations that were interested in partnering with KCU, what factors played a role in the selection of Mission Connect?

Wendy: We were excited by the many ways we saw God working around the world and wanted to help meet the needs of every one. The students’ desire to be involved through voluntary activity is what drew us unanimously to Todd and Angela’s application. We could drive just three hours and have mentored interaction with an entire Somali Bantu community! If that didn’t get our campus involved, then nothing would.

VOICE: Wendy, Islam is in the news every day and especially the threat brought on the world by Muslim fundamentalists. At its core this is a religious conflict, but most Americans are pretty uninformed on the teachings of Islam and the attitudes of Muslims toward Christians. How will this relationship with Mission Connect help resolve that problem for KCU students?

Wendy: This relationship helps students see that Muslims are people with needs such as families with parents trying to learn a new language so they can find a job in order to buy food for their children. Todd spoke in chapel about the foundational beliefs of Islam and connecting points where a Christian might discuss their faith with a Muslim. One of his main points was that the majority of Muslims are not violent, in fact, many are open to hearing about Christ. Hearing this from someone who interacts with Muslims and their families helps students learn more about discerning between media-hype and the reality that people are people wherever you go.

The Somali Bantu are the former slave population of Somalia. Though they have been free for a number of years, they were still at the bottom of the societal totem pole in Somalia. So when civil war erupted in the early 1990’s, the Somali Bantu fled to the neighboring country of Kenya. Most of them spent between 10 and 15 years in Kenyan refugee camps before making the trip to America to begin a new life. Life in the refugee camps was very hard. Infant mortality rates were among the highest in the world. These people have suffered in many ways and have known hardship their entire lives. And now they face the daunting task of learning a new language and finding a way to fit into a culture very different from their own.

VOICE: Todd, you are working in partnership with KCU to make an impact on the Somali people living in Louisville, Kentucky. What are some of the ways you are involving our students and what results do you want to see?

Todd: We have at least one outreach event each month that helps us strengthen our connection to the Somali Bantu community in Louisville. KCU students are helping us during the school year.

These events include a special “Game Day” for kids, a winterizing homes project, a Somali Bantu Festival, and a Christmas Party for the kids. We are also encouraging students to apply their area of formal training or special interest in our ministry. Nursing students, for example, will have the opportunity to conduct a health and nutrition clinic. The soccer team will host a soccer camp for kids, some Social Work majors will be able to complete their required practicum among Muslims.

We hope to see a variety of results from these interactions. First, we hope to tear down misconceptions and other relational barriers that exist between Christians and Muslims. Second, we believe KCU students will benefit from exposure to a different culture. Third, and most importantly, we hope that these interactions will help Muslims take steps toward accepting Jesus Christ. We want to see Christ’s reputation built up among our Muslims friends as KCU students reflect His goodness and shine brightly through simple acts of service.

VOICE: KCU faculty are also plugged into this work and we know you have plans to create a dialogue between some of KUC’s Bible and Ministry faculty and the Somali Bantu elders. Are these Muslim leaders open to discussing the distinctions between Islam and Christianity and what would you like to see develop from this relationship?

Todd: The Muslim elders are open to such a dialogue and I believe this will be a great benefit to everyone. KCU faculty will have a rare opportunity to learn about Muslim beliefs and practices firsthand from Muslim leaders. The Muslim elders, on the other hand, will receive the clearest explanation of the gospel that they’ve ever had. I’m excited about this because so many Muslims don’t understand our basic claims as Christians. My hope is that this dialogue will peak their curiosity about what we believe and help them feel safe to ask questions. If they reject the gospel after hearing it, that’s one thing. But if they never have the opportunity to hear it, then we have not been obedient to Christ.

VOICE: How can our readers become more informed regarding Islam and get involved in this important outreach to Muslims?

Todd: We can be reached at (502) 529-9001 or by e-mail at tkeane@insightbb.com. We are happy to send additional information to anyone who would like to receive it and we are more than glad to discuss any aspect of our ministry. Again, our passion is to see God’s people reach out to lost Muslims; to the degree that we can help churches and individuals do that, we feel we are accomplishing our mission.

Meeting Needs: One of the best ways for us to meet families is to help them. To date, this has included English classes, driving lessons, winterizing their homes, providing donations of furniture and clothing, etc.

Building Community: The Somali Bantu community in Louisville has been slow to integrate with Americans and remains very isolated. We want to help Christians in and around Louisville enter into their lives and become a joyfully accepted part of their community.

Developing Personal Relationships: By meeting their needs and building community, we have the opportunity to develop personal relationships. This leads very naturally to...
Make plans to join us February 9, 2007 for our annual Basketball Homecoming festivities. We will recognize former baseball players and coaches. We will also have a 3-point shootout during halftime of the women’s game. Our annual stromboli and pizza reception will be held in Waters Cafeteria immediately following the men’s game.
New Faces

Charise Lindsay recently joined the KCU School of Music as Assistant Professor of Music Education. Dr. Lindsay holds a Ph.D. in Music Education from Florida State University and a Master of Music degree from Butler University. She received her undergraduate degree from Milligan College and has served as a teaching assistant at Florida State University and Butler University, and an adjunct instructor at Indiana University/Purdue University.

Luana Tenge has been appointed Assistant Professor in the KCU School of Nursing. Ms. Tenge holds a Master of Science in Nursing degree from the University of Akron and earned her Bachelor of Science in Nursing degree from Ohio University. Ms. Tenge has extensive experience in both nursing practice and nursing education and has served as a classroom nursing instructor at Maysville Community College and Morehead State University.

Recognizing that distance education is a vital part of the landscape of higher education, KCU has appointed its first Director of Distance Learning. Ms. Anna Kautzman has extensive experience and is well equipped to provide immediate strategic leadership for the program and is in the process of completing a Master of Education, Higher Education Administration from Jones International University.
Education Professional Standards Board Approves Two New Teacher Preparation Programs

KCU’s Keeran School of Education has two new teacher education programs as of August 21, 2006. Kentucky’s Education Professional Standards Board approved the addition of Secondary School English and Secondary School Social Studies to the program offerings at KCU.

With the new programs, KCU now offers approved, performance-based teacher preparation programs in Elementary School for Primary Through Grade 5; Middle School for Grades 5-9 in four teaching fields, English and Communications, Mathematics, Science, and Social Studies; All Grades: Integrated Music; Secondary School for Grades 8-12 English; and Secondary School for Grades 8-12 Social Studies.

“Prospective students have consistently expressed interest in secondary education at KCU,” states Dr. Sherry L. Curtis, Dean of the Keeran School of Education at KCU. “With the addition of the new programs, students will now have the opportunity to enroll in KCU teacher preparation programs that will prepare them to teach in elementary, middle and high schools in Kentucky and throughout the nation.”

Dr. Curtis and the faculty of the Keeran School of Education are excited about the addition of two new programs and the potential these programs have to recruit more future teachers to KCU and the Keeran School of Education. For more information about any of the programs offered by KCU’s Keeran School of Education, contact Dr. Curtis at 606-474-3285/3264, slcurtis@kcu.edu or teachered@kcu.edu and visit our website at www.kcu.edu.

Summer in the Son, or SITS, is a week long event for those entering the 9th grade through those who have just graduated high school. It kicks off Sunday night and from there is a fast paced world of worship and learning. Our goal is to bring students to Christ, to strengthen their relationships with each other and with the adults that mentor them. Summer in the Son is a power packed conference that will leave you and your students with a renewed spirit, and your group with a renewed sense of purpose.

Jr. High Challenge, or JHC, is a week long event for those entering 6th-8th grades. Junior High Challenge is the only week long, junior high specific conference of its kind. JHC is a fantastic place to bring your junior high students. They will be stretched spiritually and they will be introduced to the life altering power of Jesus Christ. And we believe they will have a great time while they are here. This is not camp. JHC is a conference with powerful programming that will leave you and your group changed.

Alumni Relations

Our Alumni and Friends Reception during the NACC this past summer was a wonderful time of fellowship and reminiscing with our alumni friends. This is always a highlight in my year as I get to see so many of you gathered in one place.

Our alumni men’s soccer game broke all former participation records. We had 27 alumni men return to play. Pictures of the alumni men and women can be found on page 25.

FEAST OF CHRISTMAS
Plan to be here for the Feast of Christmas program this year. Our alumni night is Friday, December 1. Our alumni reception will take place in the upstairs lobby of Lusby Center following the performance.

HOMECOMING
I would like to recognize all former baseball players and coaches at homecoming this year on February 9, 2007.

Plan to be here to be recognized during halftime of the men’s game (approximately 8:00 p.m.). Please sign in before entering the gym. We also plan to have a three point shoot out for men and women during halftime of the ladies’ game (approximately 6:00 p.m.). I will have trophies for the first place winners. Our annual stromboli and pizza reception will be held in the cafeteria immediately following the men’s game.

I would like to ask for help in finding good addresses for many of our alumni who have moved yet haven’t sent me a change of address. I had a suggestion from one of our class presidents. He suggested that the class officers divide the list of names from their class and try to find those with bad addresses. If you are willing to help with this project, please contact the alumni office.

Please let me know if you have a change in your mailing or e-mail address. Many of the teacher’s e-mail addresses have changed. If yours has changed, please send an update.

As always, I look forward to hearing from you.
